Purfling

In violin building the purfling is what one calls the inlay that runs parallel to the edge. It is usually made out of three wood splints. The outer splints are black and the inner one is light. Ebony or colored hardwood is used for the black splints whereas maple or boxwood is used for the lighter middle splint.

back