Joint

When two parts are thrust into each other and glued, the seam is called a joint or mortise, or in violin building, a joint. You find them on the back and belly, for instance, when they are earch made of two pieces. To joint them together, a long metal tool called the joint plane is used. You can have a look at such a tool at our slide show.

back